Global Identity Development in Teacher Education with Modifications Prompted by COVID-19

For excellence in contributing toward research.

This article describes the increasing need for teacher education to prepare candidates for an intercultural globalized world. It focuses on an online course that includes a study abroad component and fits into an undergraduate or graduate teacher education program. Travel restrictions due to COVID-19 brought about opportunities to develop virtual alternatives to the study abroad component. The fully published article can be accessed through the publisher or a library database.
